- Early Phase Energy Simulation: Tools and Best Practices
Panelists: To be announced.
Decisions made early in the design process, including in competition phases, have long-lasting implications on building energy and comfort. At the Building Simulation 2017 Conference, a debate was held on whether architects should conduct energy simulation, or whether this is best left to specialists. In this session, experts and participants will dig further into this question, and discuss tools, best practices and challenges of early design phase simulation.
- Innovations in Sensing Technologies for Indoor Environments
Panelists: Ming Jin, UC Berkeley; Jovan Pantelic, CBE; and Matt Vannucci, CBE.
Moderator: Stefano Schiavon, CBE.
Researchers at CBE and affiliated centers are prototyping and testing innovate platforms for advanced sensing of the indoor environment, with the goal of tailoring and improving indoor conditions. Panelists will present and/or demonstrate devices and results, including robotic and wearable devices. Time will be reserved for discussion and feedback.
